

New Brewery Arts

Sheep - From Lamb to Loom

Cotswold sheep flocked to New Brewery Arts for the opening of 'Sheep – from Lamb to Loom', an exhibition by Kate Lynch and Alastair Goolden.

At 11am on Saturday, 9th May, beautiful golden fleeced Cotswold sheep, known as Cotswold Lions, were driven along Cricklade Street in Cirencester for the first time in many years.

The event was the first in a whole series of sheep 'happenings' at New Brewery Arts between 9th May and 21st June.

Wicker sheep greeted visitors to the exhibition. The sheep were created by Kay Lane, a student at New Brewery Arts.

The farmer was on hand to take control of proceedings.

The Cotswold Sheep Society provided accommodation for the lambs.

The event attracted a huge crowd into Brewery Court.

Shoppers stopped to watch the sheep in Cricklade Street.

Sheep have not been seen in Cirencester's market place for many years.

The Cotswold Lion has a golden fleece.

Pleased to meet ewe!

Woolly fashion was the order of the day for New Brewery Arts staff and stewards.

Photographs courtesy of New Brewery Arts. If you would like a copy of a photograph on these pages please contact admin@newbreweryarts.org.uk